They all complemented each. I found myself thumbing through the last hundred pages or so.

Basically, they were just your average teenagers until their lives were uprooted. She effectively took over the whole country and cut it off from any other foreign country. They joke around and tease each other just like other teenagers.

I loved how the author took such a major event such as the holocaust and used it in a way that was really sweet at the beginning and even though I was confused by exactly how much time had passed after the first scene, I thought the author did a good job of showing how bad the life in their 'zone'.
