For many years, the wall was a prominent feature in the dreams of East Germans. However, with the growing realization of the appreciable differences between eastern and western Germany, noted by Bohley and others, there has been a movement towards a new grassroots post-communist eastern identity. It did not want to see the DGR disappear. But it does exist. I think millions of East Germans are living at the moment as if they have no past.

One of the most intriguing aspects of the many conversations I had with East Germans was that they had helped to make history and that history was most definitely changing not only their life circumstances, but their very selves.
