John Etchemendy: 'The threat from within'. Former Provost John

Etchemendy, in a recent speech before the Stanford Board of Trustees.

Potential threats can also come from inside your own office. These come in two basic flavors: mistakes and malice. Mistakes often lead to the inadvertent.

But I'm actually more worried about the threat from within. Over the years, I have watched a growing intolerance at universities in this country.

Universities have always faced pressure to fall into line with the world-view of dominant political forces. Until the s, the main victims of attacks on academic .

Zionism, the Shoah and Israel 7. Typically the emphasis is on the implementation of external security measures—firewalls, dual authentication, or warnings about the latest email phishing scam.

The anti-Zionists have claimed all along that far from 'solving the Jewish question' they have only exacerbated it. I will talk about two of major importance: About to Kurds from different countries are thought to have joined IS, but most of them were reportedly killed in battle. Iranian Kurdish women join Peshmerga, fight IS.
