You met Alec Carrick in Night Fire. He returns full force--and believe me, this man's got force--in Night Storm, the third novel of the Night Trilogy which I wrote in.

Editorial Reviews. From Publishers Weekly. In this final installment of the Night trilogy, Coulter once again shows her knack for creating dynamic, likable lovers.

She wouldn't want to, but that didn't matter. The quiet times in between, when Arielle and Burke are married and he's trying to get her used to him, they weren't bad .
I know Anne Flosnik is a popular narrator for HR but I've always found the way she reads while the beginning promises a wonderful love-hate relationship, the transition to true love is awfully abrupt and unsatisfying, leaving way too many things unexplained. Maybe because I'm used to Coulter's more recent FBI thrillers this book seemed insipid and vacuous, but the characters and dialogue just didn't hold my. Alec is a total buttwipe.
Night Fire by Catherine Coulter is a very intense story about innocents lost, me say Coulter was brilliant in this book, the writing evoked every thought and feelings needed to side with an abused victim and I HATED with every breath Burke who unknowably evokes these thoughts and feelings with how he reacts with his feelings.
