I really love the way Jacquelyn Frank writes and how much importance she gives. Ravenna is the leader of the Chosen Ones, a small group of people from her village born with extraordinary powers. Bronse is a special-ops commander that's not the correct terminology, he's a part of a unit ETF, or something like that and a guy with a good childhood, but with a broken marriage. What in the bloody effing hell happened to out bad-guy conflict? Well I can't say cause it pretty much makes the whole book and I can't give that away. I didn't, not like learning about them, they did intrigue me, and they didn't switch to many times but I have never much liked book that switched to. He incapacitates the guards outside the door and breaks in to find her, in much worse shape than she was last he saw .
